Short term training for YU researchers in June 2017

We had a short term training from June 1st to 21st by inviting two researchers from Yangon Technological University as a training for GIS and remote sensing group, and earthquake related disaster group. During their stay in Japan, not only the technical training, but also current urban planning situation in Saitama prefecture was observed. In the training of GIS and remote sensing, a method of mapping building footprint data from high-resolution satellite images were lectured, and they learned how to use GIS. Finally, the outcomes of the training course and what they have learnt were explained in the final presentation.
